First of all, the senior editor and the editors of the class are grateful to their class president for the successful way in which he managed the affairs of the magazine as a former senior editor. They are also indebted to Ira Wilson Hoover for his active, energetic management of the Artistic Department and to William Arthur Warren, whose efforts in the same direction have made the illustrations of this number possible, in Mr. Hoover s absence. Far from any spirit of self-congratulation, the retiring board feels that much of this year s success has been due to the able support given by Nineteen-One to every project or innovation which Nineteen Hundred brought forward. Wishing the Juniors the richest success in their work on The Red And Blue, the Seniors leave to them a trust which they have considered all but sacred....
